NOMINATION FOR CAREER EDUCATION AWARD
ITEM #19

During my ten years of Federal Government service, I have had a variety of administrative assignments with each one offering new and rewarding experiences. With this background I believe that my potential contribution in the public service is greatest in the area of administration and would like to exploit this potential by additional academic study, formal government training and by receiving increasingly responsible and challenging assignments.

Since the world we live in is becoming more complex each day, it is difficult to fulfill this desire without further study of these complexities. For instance, in the past ten years the field of Automatic Data Processing has affected business and government activities with a human and technical force that continually grows and changes. The machines and methods used to process masses of information are becoming more sophisticated and as a result, more demanding. Undoubtedly this is having a tremendous effect not only on information processing but on the human element involved. Indeed, knowledge in this area is vitally important if I am to perform effectively and ultimately fulfill my obligation. Of equal importance is a knowledge of international relations, the federal budget and its effect, psychology in management and the relation of the Federal Government with the public. A Career Education Award would provide the opportunity to increase my knowledge of these and other subjects and allow me to assist the Central Intelligence Agency in fulfilling its obligation to the public.
